

Remember, the communications media belong to the public, not to a few corporations (nor to the heads of the FCC). It is in the public's best interest that the airways, print media, and Internet be available to a larger number of businesses, non-profit organizations, and individuals not to a fewer number of giant corporations.

The world certainly has changed since early in the 1900s, but the basic principles about the media have not changed, just like the basic principles of the Constitution have not changed.

Please do not allow a few giant corporations to own and manipulate the communications market --in radio, TV, Internet, and newspapers.

Sincerely,
John in Seattle
